A man was seen running down the hill from the Delmonico property after the explosion. The Victor troops, who were ordered out by Mayor French, were so stationed as to keep people from passing over the path taken by this man, and bloedhounds were sent from Canyon City and Trinidad to trail the assassin. By order of Major H. A. Naylor, of the National Guards, the bodies were removed from the coroner's establishment to an undertaker's rooms. This action was taken on request of J. S. Murphy, superintendent of the Findley mine, because it was alleged that Coroner James Doran had remarked before the discovery of the infernal machine that the death of the men was due to an accident. Later Coroner Doran explained that although he had spoken of the disaster as an awful "accident." he was convinced that a terrible crime had been committed.

A free for all fight followed and shooting began. Most of the shots were directed skyward. Hoskins fell with a bullet in the body and the crowd scattered. Secretary Hamlin, who was standing on a wagon, kept talking, unmindful of the storm of bullets that whizzed about his head.

A pitched battle is looked for at any moment. There are five thousand on the streets, and union men are arming themselves. They are thronging the streets, making their threats.

All Mines Ordered Closed.

Nearly all the mines in the region had een closed by order of the Mine Owners Association and hundreds of miners flock-ed into the town from the surrounding hills.

Fully 1,200 supporters of the association gathered about the armory at a massmeting. At the same time 1,000 men armed with all soris of weapons, were assembling on the vacant ground at Victor Avenue and Fourth Street, in response to a call for a union massmeating. Most of these were union men, who declared their intention to resist to the death any attempt to run them out of the region.

City Marshal Michael O'Connell, who had been refused admittance to the mine-owners headquarters, hurriedly swore in several hundred citizens, most of them union men as deputy policemen.

The Japanese patrol is now so efficient that the junk traffic between Port Arthur and neutral ports has been well nigh stamped out. This means that the gartison from now on must depend entirely upon the supplies within the town.

A portion of the Japanese Second army will continue to hold the land approaches to Port Arthur until Tallenwan Bay can be cleared of mines when additional troops will be landed to assist in the general assault with which Baron Oku intends to take the defenses of Port Arthur. In the meanwhile, a screen of mounted troops is being pushed beyond Kaiping for the purpose of allowing the reconstruction of the demolished rallway to proceed.

London, June 7.—The Russian correspondent of The Times states that the Russian government is now sending nothing but reserves to the seat of war, and is holding all raw recruits at home. The reason, however, is not that the trained troops are more badly needed at the front than the recruits, but that there is a suspicion that the entire reserve is permeated with radicalism and cannot be trusted to put down demonstrations against the government.

This system of reinforcing the army in the field has naturally created profound discontent, not only among the reservists themselves, but also among the big employers of labor in the Russian cities, who are left without skilled mechanics to operate their factories. It is clear that in high quarters there exists a fear of what will happen when the war ends, and that everything possible to safeguard the government is to be done. It is generally believed that the loss of Port Arthur will be followed by an attempted uprising against the Czar, and to prevent this troops from the country districts are being sent into the cities to do garrison duty. By this means it is hoped that the Nihlilists can be kept under and revolutionary demonstrations nipped in A strong peace party is springing up

A strong peace party is springing up in Russia, and the feeling that the war should be ended is gaining ground. However, the Czar and his chief advisers are firm in the belief that nothing should be done toward ending the war until Russian military prestige has been restored by victories over the enemy.

According to good authority, M. Von Piehve is endeavoring to float a new loan in European financial circles, but so far he has met with little encouragement. He approached a representative of the Rothschilds and was told that they had no money to lend to Russia until she changed her attitude toward the Jews. Because of this Von Piehve has issued secret instructions to all provincial governors enjoining them to

ST. PETERBURG, June 6.—General Kuropatkin telegraphs to the Emperor under date of June 4th, giving particulars of the affair near Wafengkau stat.on May 30th, in which the Russian losses are given as two officers wounded, three men killed and forty-two wounded. General Kuropatkin says one Japanese squadron was almost entirely destroyed and another forced back after suffering considerable loss. General Kuropatkin gives this account of the fight in which Colonel Strakoff was killed:

"Our Cossacks were fired upon by Japanese infantry, occupying a fortified position on the heights near the village of Khotslaputse, eighteen miles from Feng-Wang-Chens. At the outset the Japanese attempted to advance across the valley of Koaulndzypho, but were stopped by an accurate fire from our field guns which the Cossacks had succeeded in bringing into position.

"The Cossacks dismounted, and with the aid of reinforcements and the fire of two guns forced the Japanese to abandon their position to retire under cover of their supports. The engagement lasted from 1 P. M. until 5 P. M.

Lynn, MASS., June 6.—Health authorities and physicians of the "Shoe City" in alarmed over the prevalance of that deadly disease, "anthrax," which has carried off five victims within eighteen months, and stricken down one of Lynn's most prominent citizens, George E. Sprague, who, however, is slowly recovering after an operation, the operation may possibly leave his face disfigured for life, however, as the surgeons had to remove a large lump from his jaw, where a pus bag had formed under skin. This disfigurement cannot be determined for come time yet, and there is hope that surgical skill can provent it.

In the meantime the morocco workers of the city are in a state of panic over the possibility of a spread of the infection, as the Lynn factories handle 6,000, on imported skins annually. All, moracco operators are wearing gloves now as a measure of precaution, but this is only small protection as it has been determined that the germs will float in the air, and can be carried miles after being blown from truck loads of goats skins.
